BORROWING.

The Advertiser defends the nation's going into debt for needed public improvements. Its arguments are sound in the abstract. The outcry against borrowing has, however, been due to the fact that the necessity for borrowing has to a large extent been created by the present Government, in having squandered the ample revenues it came heir to, in unproductive and unimproving services. What the Government's supporters are required to do just now is to produce assurances that the money wanted to be borrowed will not in like manner be misapplied. The Legislature having given the Government a very long rope in the matter of appropriations, there is much reason to fear that it may borrow and borrow to the end of the period and the limit of the law, and yet the country be left without its numerous needed improvements.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Reports that had been abroad of a compact between Mr. Gladstone and the Irish party, whereby for the parliamentary support of the latter the Government would concede the removal of Mr. Trevelyan from the Irish Secretaryship and Lord Spencer from the Lord-Lieutenantship, seem to be in fact untrue. Trevelyan has resigned. It is hard to see what either side is to gain from such a bargain, if it has been entered into, for already the Irish party has begun obstruction in the House of Commons, and there is no reason to believe that any Government can long afford to grant the Irish just the kind of administration which will suit their agitators.

Vote early and often to-morrow. Vote for Blaine and Logan if you want a glittering national policy, embellished with rhetoric and martial banners. Vote for Cleveland and Hendricks if you would like a change, and have the best-looking candidate and the ablest one in the two highest offices of the Union. Vote for St. John if you want to forewarn the flowing bowl, and make the nation sober. Vote for Butler if you want the Angean stables cleansed, if you want rag money, emancipated labor and a ruction generally among the dry bones. Vote for Mrs. Stanton if you want to resign the national breeches.

THE LAST SAD RITES.

The funeral of the late Honorable Mrs. Bernice Pauahi Bishop took place, according to announcement, yesterday. As befitting the rank of the deceased, an imposing stateliness mingled with the whole solemn proceedings, while the popular demonstrations of sympathy were such as to show that the whole community realized a great bereavement. The weather could not have been more propitious for any out-of-door event, the sky being bright all day and the dust subdued by the heavy showers of the previous night. When the set time for the obsequies approached, the stir that arose along the streets would have shown the veriest stranger that some unusual event was about taking place. From every direction people of many nationalities, of both sexes and all ages, were directing their steps toward Kaakopua, the house of mourning. Here came the members of the Kawaiahao Church, in sombre black, to pay the last tributes of respect and love to their late fellow-worshiper; there schools of little ones, neatly arrayed, to follow to the tomb one who had delighted to do them good. To the ear there was a clatter of martial hoofs and the regular beat of military tread; to the eye, a gay succession of uniforms, as the horse and foot of the royal guards, and the gallant firemen by companies, together with the various societies in regalia, moved by different approaches to the rallying grounds of the funeral parade. At the appointed time for the services to begin in the house, a scene not soon to be forgotten was presented in the outside vicinity. Heavily draped in fluttering crape, the large front portico was in mournful contrast to the bright mansion with its lofty gilded vane, while the symbols of we covering the massive gate pillars warned the casual glance that the gorgeous kahilis lining the garden avenue were not there to grace a festival for the living. A platoon of cavalry stood a guard of honor on either side of the main entrance. On the opposite side of the street about a hundred native women, of the Kawaiahao Church, were drawn up in line, flanked by a few of the male members. Far down the route of procession stretched the lines of military and of the other organizations, which were to precede the hearse, and far up the rear the carriages and pedestrians that were to follow in the cortege. Along the sidewalks in rear of all those mentioned was a dense throng of spectators, of every nationality in our very mixed population, Chinese relatively predominating as being the largest element in the community who did not regard the proceedings other than as matter of curiosity.

The services at the residence were attended by a large number of people. Their Majesties the King and Queen, H. R. H. Princess Likelike, H. R. H. Princess Kaiulani, His Ex. Gov. Dominis, Hon. A. S. Cleghorn, His Majesty's Ministers Gibson, Kapena and Gulick, Chief Justice Judd, Foreign Ministers, Consuls and others were assigned to special seats. Shortly after the appointed time, the chief mourners took their seats at the head of the casket from the organ. The coffin was covered with a royal pall of black velvet, and surrounded with the most profuse and beautiful display of floral offerings that could be conceived, consisting of crosses, pillars, horseshoes, wreaths, etc. The services commenced with the Kawaiahao Church Choir chanting a funeral psalm in Hawaiian, accompanied on the organ by Mr. Wray Taylor. It was sung most beautifully and with marked expression, drawing tears from many eyes. The Rev. H. H. Parker then went on with the service in Hawaiian, after which he delivered very impressive and appropriate prayer in English. The Fort Street Church Choir then sung very effectively without accompaniment, "Blessed Home Land" from the Gospel Hymns, by request of the Hon. Mr. Bishop. This brought the services to a close, and the coffin, which was resting on a small bier on wheels, draped in black with fringe all round, was then drawn slowly out of the house by the front entrance, down an inclined platform to the catafalque, the following acting as pall-bearers: G. C. Beckley, Samuel Parker, R. Austin, Palekaluhi, Kaluna, Kahalehau, J. G. Hoapili, and J. Humphries. The scene was distressing in the extreme as the body was slowly borne from the house. The faithful attendants of the deceased and others in the grounds broke out spontaneously in bitter weeping, which was taken up by the native women drawn up outside, until the air was rent on all hands with weird chants and mournful cries. The catafalque was the one used on former occasions, with a canopy surmounted by a crown draped in black.

The procession moved off in the order given below, with remarkably little of the interruption incident to putting such miscellaneous bodies of people in regular motion. Coming out of the gate the horses drawing the catafalque were a little excited, their prancing movements making the spectators retreat, but they were soon curbed and behaved well for the rest of the way. Following is the

The procession occupied about twenty-five minutes in passing a given point.

On Nuuanu Avenue the cortege was to be seen to the best advantage. There it had settled into a regular beat and proportioned distances, and the wide and long thoroughfare gave opportunity of viewing the cavalcade as a whole. It was a most striking sight as a spectacular display at that place, and the pathetic strains of the bands, as they discoursed the dead march and well-known devotional tunes, were calculated to leave an enduring impression of the event upon the sense of hearing. A more complete kaleidoscopic picture than the view of the procession, forward from the hearse, could hardly be imagined. There was the contrast of white raiment trimmed with white; the harmonious blending of the prevailing red and blue of the fire brigade and blue and white of the police; the brilliant mixture of all the rainbow hues in the uniforms of the troops; tipped with the gay helmets with ultramarine plumes, and dark caps with red trimmings and cockades; the cavalry guards and mounted marshals in gold lace and gorgeous array; the soft and bright feather capes of the pall-bearers; the stately and beautiful kahilis with their symbolic meaning, and the gloomy catafalque with its chilling signification of the certain end of all human pomp and parade, followed by its sad train of mourners for the worthy dead.

Arriving at the Royal Mausoleum, the body was received by His Majesty's Chamberlain, Col. C. H. Judd. A platform had been built to receive the coffin and bier from the catafalque, and as it was drawn in to its last and final resting place, the heart rending wails, from the large crowd of natives assembled, was something beyond description.

The elegant coffin, which has been previously described, bore the following inscription engraved on a most beautiful plate of solid silver in the form of a shield:

"The Honorable Bernice Pauahi Bishop, Daughter of the Chiefs A. Paki and L. Konia, and wife of the Honorable Charles R. Bishop. Born December 19th, 1831. Died October 16th, 1884."

As soon as the body had been placed in position and the mourners and others who were privileged to be admitted to the Mausoleum had taken their places, the Rev. Mr. Parker offered up a prayer, and the Kawaiahao Choir sang with organ accompaniment that beautiful hymn, "Rock of Ages," in Hawaiian. It was specially selected as one of the favorites of the deceased illustrious lady. Mr. Parker pronounced the blessing, and then loving hands arranged the beautiful flowers on and around the coffin, and after certain kahilis had been fixed in position, the mourners took their departure and the vast concourse soon afterwards dispersed.

The scene at the cemetery during the final rites was one never to be erased from the memory of any whose eyes took it in. On the right and front of the Mausoleum a bright picture of tropical foliage interspersed with a wilderness of color and glitter; away to the left the bare and gloomy sides of Punch-bowl, with some spectators perched at the summit; surrounding the portals of the royal tomb the sympathetic multitude, 'conspicuous' to the sight the kahilis with their sturdy bearers, to the ear the dismal wailing and chanting of the women; and, away in the foreground, looking out over the height, the luxuriantly embowered town, the reefs and the ocean—emblem of infinity. There and thus was the last of the Kamehamehas laid to rest.
